Alexis A Hartz : Coach Life (Volume 1) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Coach Life (Volume 1):

Well, not quite since as almost everyone has noted it's too short. (Perfectly "good value" at its length for its 99 price tag, I just wanted to read more!) For all of the MANY people out there living and traveling in RVs, there is a remarkable shortage of books where people combine their travel stories with the more practical aspects of traveling by RV. Alexis deftly marries the two in this story of her first year as a full-time workcamper. I didn't want it to end and I sure hope she has more books in the works. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. For all people who want to hit the road, or dream about it. By Richard E. McCullough You have to admire Alexis Hartz for stepping into the totally new world of RV living, by herself, not for a weekend or a week but for four years. Learning all of the challenging aspects of driving, parking, maintaining, and managing a large coach, while pulling her car, on the fly. Not easy to do, and any reader who has done it knows this. That is impressive, and her writing is impressive as well. Plenty of stories about her accomplishments and setbacks, as well as all the characters she meets along the way. I can't wait for the next book to see where her travels take her. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Life on the road in a Tindominium By grace the mystic Alexis is a road warrior who follows her dream to travel in her Tindominium with careful abandon. She mixes her triumphs and tragedies with a sense of humor. Her honest reflections of her year on the road are filled with the color of the West and her friendships made. Cat, her meowing partner shares the adventure and sometimes causes trouble. I wondered what it would be like seeing the country in a Tindominium. I'm a Holiday Inn kinda girl. So thanks Alexis for the inside story of Coach Life. Look forward to reading more of your stories.

Could living her dream become a nightmare? After a few bumps in the road, including three divorces, a brush with the law and caring for her terminally ill and fractious mother, Alexis opts out of chasing the security of a conventional suburban lifestyle to live her most unconventional daydream. She blindly purchases a sun-bleached, secondhand RV and hits the road with a tankful of optimism. But ignorance is not always bliss, especially for a single woman traveling with a persnickety cat and living out of a 10-ton motor home equipped with a panoply of mechanical mysteries. Alexis confronts road hazards, breakdowns, potential ax murderers and the inevitable rookie mistakes that plague all first-time RVers. Fear continuously paralyzes her, but on her own, she finds a way past her fallacious foe. If you have ever thought about trashing your day job for a daydream --or wanted to live a mid-life adventure instead of a mid-life crisis, then you're sure to enjoy this comical, poignant and encouraging memoir.

About the Author Alexis Hartz is an author, organizer, and explorer. She's writing her next book while living the life of a Sandwiched Baby Boomer -- working a corporate job, looking toward retirement, downsizing (always), visiting family members across the country and living as many Bucket List experiences she can. When life gives her lemons she makes twists. Learn more about her at www.AlexisHartz.com.
