Travel is a hobby many consider out of reach because of cost. Inexpensive travel doesn't have to mean you can't see it all, in fact, some of the best trips in the world can be experienced for just a few dollars a day. If you've put off planning a trip, learn how to see the world and gain a deeper appreciation for other cultures, while keeping costs low. I discuss ways to be a smart traveler, including choosing a destination, group and solo travel, accommodations, transportation, and practicalities. You'll leave with the confidence to plan a dream journey, and the knowledge to keep your budget under $30 a day.

About the Author Born in California, the author has traveled to and lived in numerous countries around the world. Educated as an historian at the graduate level, he has an appreciation for thorough research and detailed writing. In China he taught English to children, in Boston he pulled espresso for doctors, and in Brookline he taught the art of travel to excited young minds. He currently resides in Brooklyn, where he writes, runs, plays his violin, and maintains the mindset of a traveler as a method of survival in the concrete jungles of Yankee-land. He believes travel highlights the best of human intellect, creativity, and compassion while it serves as a source of relief and energy.
