By D. Lancaster
After just reading Slocum's great book, I guess I expected more of the same, instead what I read was just another travel log. Somewhat interesting. Perhaps something is lost during translation. I was a bit disappointed in the read.

Guy Bernardin, a French racing sailor, buys a replica of the spray and takes his wife and 3-year-old son on a circumnavigation retracing Joshua Slocum's famous voyage. It is 1995 and Guy, Annick and Briac will spend the next three years travelling around the world in Spray of Saint Briac. First, on a trial run, they leave from Newport, get to Guy's native Brittany, and then go on to Portugal, Spain and a new crossing of the Atlantic, the Caribbean and back to New England via the Intracoastal Waterway. Then, familiar with the spray, and their life on board, they follow in the wake of Slocum. The Atlantic, where they escape Hurricane Chantal, the Azores, Tenerife, Culebra, the Panama Canal, the Pacific, the Tuamotus to Australia, the Indian Ocean, South Africa, the South Atlantic with a stop at St Helena, and back to Newport in time to participate in the anniversary celebrations. Bernardin brings a fresh look to this travelogue. An expert sailor, he enjoys himself doing what seems to him easy sailing. He introduces his young child to life on a boat and discovers the whole world at the same time. This is the story of a happy family at sea. Remembering Slocum and his own grandfather, a Cape Horner, Bernardin takes his son on an adventure that he hopes Briac will never forget.
